Here is a question for all you legal scholars out there. Is a tweet copyrightable? Is a tweet copyrighted by default when its published? Can there possibly be a fair use exception for something that is only 140 characters or less?

I got to thinking about this when I tweeted about an NBA game. I tweeted to the people who follow me. While I never asked that they not distribute it to other tweeters, i did not give anyone permission to republish my tweets in a commercial newspaper, magazine or website.

So when an ESPN.com or any other outlet republishes a tweet, have they violated copyright law?

Is twittering the process of publishing in 140 characters or less, or is it a private communications to those that follow you? Even if you dont block outsiders from seeing it?

You could also extend this to Facebook. Do you own your status update? Is it a private communications between you and friends, or is a published work? If a newspaper or website wants to publish your status update, do they need permission first?
